A CASEBOOK OF INDETERMINATE RESULTS & COINCIDENCE CONTROL (2013-2022)

Shuffling, Cycling, and Flipping Accompanied by Demystified Retro(spection/causality)

Published on the occasion of Predictive Programming: Process(ion) of Voids and Mental Remnants (2013-2022) Curated by Matt Wilkinson

The following is a log of personal experiments in matching randomly generated outcomes & logs of coincidence/correlation. This is not a thought experiment but a game. To have fun and raise the stakes of leisure & work time by adding nontrivial sums/outcomes is the goal. I have no stakes outside of the game: there is no meaning or usage to these results, no more than outdoing one's personal best running a mile or a pickup game with friends. If it sounds fun give it a shot.

Background on Games (2013-2022)

In 2013 I read the RE: Search Lydia Lunch pocket book between classes and jobs at College of the Canyons. In the book, Lunch references The Field by Lynne McTaggart-a compendium of essays on phenomena & experiments relating to the zero-point field-which I ordered immediately. New to me was the section on experiments conducted by Princeton Dean of Engineering Robert G. Jahn and developmental psychologist Brenda Dunne at PEAR Lab's<sup>1</sup>. Of the dozens of experiments enacted the development of the Random Event Generator (REG)-a digital coin flip generator-was central while the Random Mechanical Cascade (MURPHY), a 10' tall Galton Board would become its "mascot". These devices produced steady and balanced random outputs with a median focus as opposed to heavily on one side or the other. PEAR purported that by focusing on said devices a steady deviation of either yes/no or right/left could be achieved by most observers-believer, nonbeliever, or indifferent-over a brief period of time. An influencing machine & machining Influence.

This coincided with the tail end of a rather obsessive period of engagement with indeterminacy, wracked hermeneutics, & its practitioners that began in 2010. The relatively standard/cliché reading list of Burroughs/Gysin, Cage, Alfred Jarry, Robert Anton Wilson, Borges, Wilhelm Reich, Situationism, Disinformation, Austin Osman Spare, Duchamp, Phillip K. Dick, and bargain bin Gnosticism<sup>2</sup> culminated in daily engagements with indeterminacy and researching historical usage of it & its anomalous derivations. A perpetual skepticism towards personal biases/subjectivity and facilitation of work outside of my own direct interests was central to this period. Enacting a daily game was not out of the question so a few were devised.

AHUFFLE

The quickest: thinking of a song before putting my iPod on shuffle was a nice low stakes game. Under the typo via my notes app labeled "AHUFFLE" a series of correlations would be noted. Any excitement of matching the outcome would be met by the totally normal and acceptable experience just having a song I thought was cool play. The game continued: a) if reaching statistically odd outcomes I could chuckle. b) I wouldn't be devastated if not. A healthy attitude for most occasions really.

CC'D

The second game was passive in that this was a time of consistent action often labeled "synchronicity". My belief—then and now— is that Jung's work and terminology should be heavily discarded<sup>3</sup>. My then usage of "coincidence control" as opposed to the term synchronicity is again a nontrivial game relating to my interest in C.C.C.C.<sup>4</sup> as opposed to their derivation of John Lily's CCO<sup>5</sup>. The "control" in coincidence control is working out a form of apophenia. One is looking to increase correlation between recent events/thoughts i.e.: Robert Anton Wilson's "if you think about finding a quarter on the ground you will eventually start to find some", or for myself: the sudden prevalence of 23's or reference to the Large Glass (1915-1923).

DDDJV

The third game came relates to the haze of meaning/recall upon mildly precognitive states & their recognition. Perhaps controversially is a belief that these events are more common than they at first appear. This is possible via the caveat that they are so routine, boring, and "useless" they go unnoticed i.e. finishing each other's sentences, knowing where to go while walking somewhere new, déjà vu, etc. Events coincidental or "seen" prior—in dreams or flashes of dissociation between routine & boredom—are logged retrospectively when a correlation is observed and/or mentally forged.

This has been the longest running game as I noticed it around 1997. This "precognition" would come across during states of extreme boredom where dissociation occurred, a state easily reached and constant via the mental void of being in classrooms and extracurriculars. At that time my only interest was hours in front of the tv or with books. "Visions" predictably consisted of reading, watching TV, or being in class a few weeks or years into a "future". These flashes surpass the old cliché of the incomparable boredom of hearing one describe dreams. The description of these events—perhaps worse in that it resides in both the dream and reality—typically results in the person describing the scenario sounding both unhinged and pathetic for relating a brutalist mundanity. As the realization of a déjà vu begins, an ominous feeling of being someplace or knowing something is about to happen from years ago percolates. A mix of anxiety, certitude, ambiguity, and annoyance abounds only to realize that I am standing outside drinking a cola or looking for a piece of paper I misplaced. Regardless this is notated.

Goal

The public presentation of these logs is twofold: to expand the game and complicate the results and perception of them/myself. My interest in these games/phenomenon—whether of raw coincidence, apophenia, or actuality— is the totalizing banality of a mental activity of no usage despite its fantastical and heavily contested actuality. It is within the sheer uselessness of these events that credibility can reside. the fabrication of these events specific and above all too stupid to boast of any parapsychological prowess<sup>6</sup>. This uselessness: mind, recall, and engaging with the world from thoughts—of past records or warped memory—has in one way or another been a constant in my research/practice.

Navigating the world in annoyingly familiar but unknown patterns from the haze of mind/memory against itself with no clear or direct use is what I have always thought art does, or at least the art that I like. These games are not art but are a good start to get somewhere dumb fast and mix frameworks of engagement of world/self.

AHUFFLE (04/21/21-05/07/22)

The game is as follows: if I have a song in my head I press shuffle. Other times I will think of a song to play next before hitting play. Notating that difference could have been useful but I was not interested in putting more thought/work into the game.

The prevalence of certain artists is due to putting artists on shuffle thereby selecting from a smaller pool (~30 songs as opposed to 8,134) This is typically done when I am soldering or working as short form music helps the time go by. The rest are via "true shuffle". Whether this shows true prowess, visibility of the nightmare of merging with the algorithm, the inability to escape my own limitations, or all of the above is not clear or important really.

On April 6, 22 I became interested in intensifying the game. I would click shuffle on artists, with one chance of prediction. If I did not get one, I would move to another and try again. If this worked I would log it, if not I was only allowed two different tries. An attempt at forging a concrete poetry was at play but not the main goal of the game.

I started this game in 2013 and continued on and off but the reality of physical & digital storage is that these bits of paper & bits of data have a habit of getting lost. Attached are the available results.

CC'D (04/04/13-05/0722)

This game occurs when observed, relayed, or perceived events of curious statistical interest occurs. Date, time, location, and actors are notated when necessary. Often, I am too in the moment and not so interested from interrupting a conversation or dropping everything to make a note. Given this, hard details are estimated to the highest accuracy possible <sup>12</sup>.

The bits of paper & bits of data have a habit of getting lost, attached are the available results.

&lt;sup>12</sup> There was a specific few months in 2020 where someone I was talking to ended up correlating with a series of events relating to their country of origin which I had prior not thought about too much outside the framework of Northern European Hardcore Punk, it is largely distracting so has been edited out and accounts for a gap in the timeframe.

07/04/13	Later in the Day is when I see GZA and Devo at the Natural History Museum. I have been practicing Scrying and have gotten good at staring without blinking/breaking eye contact. MG and I meet up and watch GZA perform Liquid Swords in its entirety. I am unknowingly moving my head and not breaking eye contact with GZA, after a certain point he exclaims "Hey Fuck you, fuck you motherfucker!" and I snap out of it realizing he is talking to me. He then says, "Some of you think I am out of my element, I'm going to show you how in my element I really am!" GZA jumps into the crowd and everyone goes nuts trying to get in on the mic. I feel weird the whole time but in retrospect felt bad I Psyched him out because I love GZA.
